REAL-LIFE PATHWAY

After finishing school, Aina wasn't sure what to study or commit to long-term. Instead of rushing into a full degree, she started with a few business micro-credentials to explore her interests.

As she progressed, she discovered a passion for marketing. The modules she completed didn't go to waste—they were stacked into a Bachelor of Business Administration programme.

By the time she officially entered her degree, Aina was already ahead, confident in her direction, and clear about her future career.

REAL-LIFE JOURNEY

Jason had been working for years but felt stuck in his role. He knew the industry was changing, especially with data and AI becoming more important—but he didn't have those skills.

Instead of going back to study full-time, he started with a short micro-credential in AI and data analytics. Within weeks, he was already applying what he learned at work.

His new skills didn't go unnoticed. He was given more responsibilities, and soon after, a better role.

What started as one short course became a turning point—and later, a pathway towards a Master's degree.
