Brooke Thomas is a founder, executive mentor, business strategist, keynote speaker, and international bestselling author who has spent more than two decades guiding high-achieving women to build extraordinary businesses, expand their influence, and create lives of lasting impact.

She has founded and scaled multiple successful companies and now leads the Live Out Loud Network, a global group of founders, CEOs, executives, and accomplished women committed to leading with purpose, guided by biblical truth, and building businesses rooted in faith, generosity, and lasting impact.

Through executive mentorship, private leadership communities, transformational live events, and strategic business education, Brooke serves as a trusted advisor to women who have achieved significant success and are ready to elevate their leadership, increase their capacity, and step confidently into their next level of growth.

Brooke leads a portfolio of executive leadership communities serving women from emerging founders to some of the nation's most accomplished business leaders. Her most exclusive advisory experience is reserved for women operating at the highest levels of leadership, revenue, and influence. Known for developing exceptional leaders and building thriving organizations, Brooke helps women create businesses that generate not only greater income, but greater impact.

She is also the founder of Love Out Loud, a nonprofit organization that mobilizes successful women to collectively fund and support initiatives creating transformational change around the world.

Brooke's perspective was shaped by one defining moment: surviving stage-three melanoma while pregnant with her oldest daughter in 2004. That experience transformed the way she approaches leadership, business, and life. Today, she leads with unwavering faith, courageous conviction, and a deep commitment to helping others build lives, businesses, and legacies that matter.
