

Healing happens in community.

A faith-rooted, intergenerational foster care village.

Where children, families, and neighbors live life together in hope.

The Foster Care Dilemma

Every day, children enter foster care carrying trauma, loss, and instability. Foster families step forward with courage and love — but too often, they do it alone.

Isolation leads to burnout.

---

Burnout leads to disrupted placements.

---

Sibling groups are often separated.

---

And children experience another move... another loss... another break in relationship.

The Truth We've Seen

Children from hard places heal best in the context of steady, loving relationships. Foster families thrive when they are not alone. And when generations walk life together, everyone flourishes.

The Streams of Hope Vision

Streams of Hope Community is an intergenerational foster care village envisioned for Northwest Indiana. As the organization prayerfully seeks the right land or property partnership, the vision remains clear: to create a stable, community-rooted place where children, foster families, seniors, and the local church can share life together through worship, care, and daily support.

This is not a program.
It is a neighborhood designed for healing.

The Community Will Include

5 senior cottages
(55+)

A community hub for meals, tutoring,
gatherings, and support

5 foster family
homes

Because of the shortage of foster homes locally and nationally, many children are placed out of county or in residential care far from home, while others remain in county detention centers without a family placement. Remote placements and unnecessary institutional care compound instability. Streams of Hope exists to change that trajectory.

Why This Model Works

Research and lived experience show that intergenerational support:

- Improves placement stability
- Increases foster family retention
- Strengthens child well-being
- Creates lifelong relational safety nets

Foster care was never meant to be done alone.

Be the Village

Streams of Hope is currently in the foundation phase — completing design readiness, partnerships, and site preparation so construction and agency agreements can move forward responsibly. Early partners at this stage do more than fund planning.

They help unlock the future of the community.
