Standard bio

Erez Avramov works with business owners and leadership teams on the gap between deciding and doing: the place where high-stakes decisions stall, execution slips and money quietly leaks.

He learned how decisions work under pressure. He's a former Air Force commando and has lived through three near-death experiences. He spent a year and a half trying to save his leg, then chose to have it amputated. Each of those moments called for a clear decision, and the follow-through to come out the other side.

Off the stage, owners and leadership teams bring him in when decisions get stuck and a call needs to be made. On the stage, his keynote, The Hidden Cost of Indecision, shows audiences where decisions stall, what the waiting costs, and how to decide faster and execute sooner.

Erez is a TEDx speaker.
