🤖 5 Prompts, No Tricks

Steal these. No setup required.

---

1 — THE MIND READER Turn a complaint into an offer.

```
You're a business strategist. Here's a complaint I hear from customers over and over: "[COMPLAINT]."

Give me three offers I could build that solve it. For each: what it is, what I'd charge, and why someone would pay for it instead of just living with the problem. Be specific. No generic advice.
```

---

2 — THE TRANSLATOR Make a normal human understand you.

```
Rewrite this so a smart twelve-year-old understands it, without making it sound like it's written for a twelve-year-old. Keep every fact. Cut every word that's doing no work. If I've used jargon, explain it in the same sentence or replace it.

[PASTE YOUR TEXT]
```

---

3 — THE CLOSER Three ways to handle your most common objection.

```
You're a sales coach. My most common objection is: "[OBJECTION]."
Here's how I usually respond: "[WHAT YOU ACTUALLY SAY]"

Give me three better responses:
1. One that acknowledges and reframes
2. One that asks a question instead of answering
3. One that agrees with them and moves forward anyway

Match how I already talk. Don't make me sound like a salesperson.
```

---

4 — THE TIME MACHINE Next quarter's content, from your own calendar.

```
I run a [BUSINESS TYPE] in [CITY].

Walk me through the next three months. For each month: what are my customers dealing with, worrying about, or buying? What's seasonal that I should be talking about BEFORE it happens?

Then give me one piece of content per month that gets there first.
```

---

5 — THE GHOSTWRITER Three messy lines → a sendable follow-up.

```
Here are my rough notes from a call:
[PASTE — messy is fine, messy is the point]

Write the follow-up email:
- Reference something specific they said
- Restate their problem in their words
- One clear next step
- End with a question they can answer in five words
- Under 150 words. Sound like a person, not a template.
```

Next Friday, Nov 6 — The Video Spokesperson. Your face and voice on video, without turning on a camera.

Join our NEW online community: https://clients.journeybuilder.io/communities/groups/jay-the-ai-guy-community/home?invite=6a9edeef3afa6787f44957a2