4 SIMPLE STEPS TO REAL SECURITY

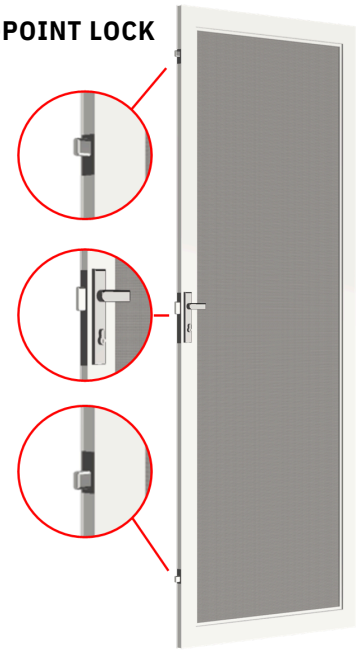

When it comes to protecting your home and family, knowing what to look for when buying a security doors is essential. Follow these four simple steps to ensure your investment provides real security and performance.

1. A SECURITY DOOR MUST HAVE A 3-POINT LOCK

A strong and compliant security door starts with a 3-point lock. A 3-point lock is likely to prevent the top or bottom corner of the door being wrenched open by an intruder.
Key locks must have a 5-point cylinder minimum.

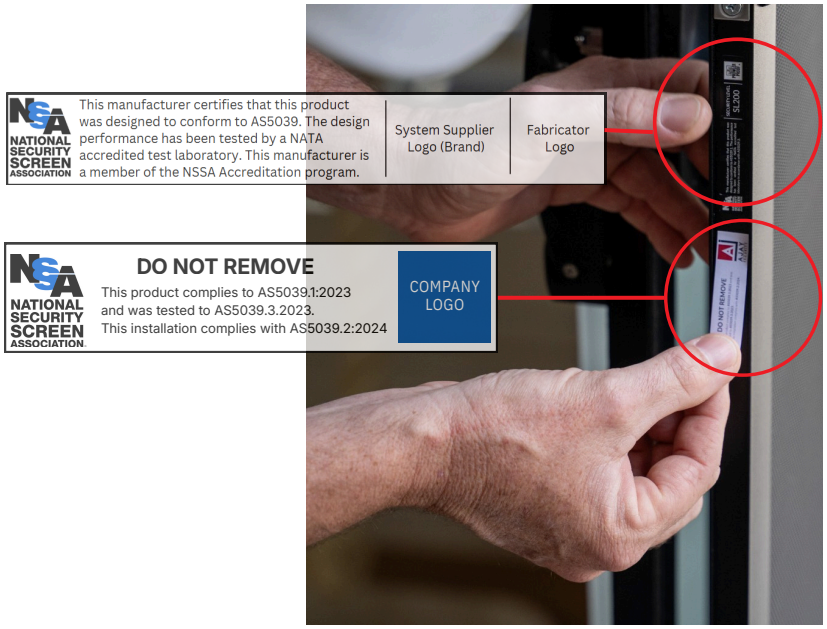

Why it matters: A 3-point lock secures your door at the top, middle, and bottom, making it significantly harder to force open.

What to look for: Check that the security door has a tested 3-point locking system for added strength, durability and reliability.

2. LOOK FOR THE AUSTRALIAN STANDARDS COMPLIANCE LABELS

To be sold and installed as a security door, the product must comply with Australian Standard AS 5039.1:2023 - Manufacture and installed to meet Australian Standard AS 5039.2:2024 - Installation. Your security door should display both compliance labels as your assurance of meeting rigorous testing, Australian manufacture, correct installation and genuine security.

IF ITS NOT LABELLED, IT'S NOT A SECURITY DOOR

3. ENSURE YOUR INSTALLER IS LICENSED

Ask your installer if they are licensed.
There are two types of licenses:

- Building License
- Security License

Why it Matters: A licensed installer is qualified and authorised to carry out the work.

Note: Licensing requirements vary for States and Territories and in some states a license is not required. For more information go to our website: nssa.org.au or contact us at info@nssa.org.au.

4. CHOOSE AN NSSA MEMBER

Security is an investment in your home, when you choose an NSSA member, you're choosing peace of mind.

Why it Matters: Our members are compliant, ethical, trained in correct installation practices, meet regulatory requirements and our manufacturing members are audited annually to ensure they meet Australian Standards and adhere to industry guidelines.
